

Emily Zisman is an up-and-coming folk-Americana singer-songwriter born and raised in the San Francisco Bay Area. Emily is currently performing throughout California in support of her latest self-released album "Weeds & Wildflowers". On the album, she sings of our vulnerabilities and fears, love and fight, crafting her lyrics into song with her soulfully-folk voice evocative of Emmylou Harris.

As a feminist songwriter, Emily takes her writing cues from artists like Dar Williams, Joni Mitchell, and Ani DiFranco. "Songwriting helps me regain my strength through the practice. I can only hope that my songs will help others in the same way." When talking about performing, Emily smiles. "I absolutely love the energy shared between an audience and a performer. When it's there, the play that happens between the listeners and performers creates a unique experience. It's hard not to get carried away in that moment."

In addition to her solo work, Emily is part of electronic duo Chance's End, a violin-electronica project she performs in with her longtime collaborator, violinist Ryan Avery. Emily is also an in-demand vocalist performing regularly around the San Francisco Bay Area with groups such as gypsy jazz collective The Americano Social Club and swing-era jazz group Rich & The Rhythm Roustabouts.
